

The Photographic Group, together with partners and other interested friends went on a visit to Chatham Historic Dockyard in August this year.

Our timed entrance into the Victorian Ropery included a 40 minute tour set in 1875 with a demonstration of how rope was made at that time, what working conditions were like and general living standards and finished at the quarter mile long ropewalk, where rope is still made today. The rest of the day was spent wandering through the many other exhibits, including a short tour through HM Submarine Ocelot. Many photographs were taken, many stories told on the journey back, but one thing we were all agreed on was that it was a good day out.
